MATTHEW PATTEN'S DIARY

One of the early settlers in Bedford was Matthew Patten, who was born in Ireland, May 19, 1719, and moved to this country in 1728. He came to Souhegan-East in 1738; was judge of probate in this county, being appointed to that office in 1776. He represented the towns of Bedford and Merrimack in the general court in 1776 and 1777; was one of the governor's council in 1778; was appointed justice of the peace about 1751, and continued in that office until his death, August 27, 1795. He died in a field near the south part of the town. The men were mowing, and he went to carry them their dinner. Being somewhat fatigued, he sat down under a tree, where in a short time he was found dead.

He had always kept a diary. After his death, this remained in the possession of his daughters, Sarah and Polly Patten. They gave it to Dr. Peter P. Woodbury about the year 1850, or rather they gave to him that portion of the diary which then remained, for the earlier pages from its beginning down to about 1754 had been lost. Dr. Woodbury preserved this diary until his death in 1860, when it continued in the possession of his family until the present time. Its merits were so much appreciated by the town, as a record of its earliest settlement, that the sum of $500 was appropriated for its publication, and the committee who were charged with the publication of the town's history were entrusted with the duty of publishing this diary.

The diary was written upon pages of white writing paper, six inches long by three and a half inches wide, and in so fine a hand that upon some of them more than four hundred words are to be found. The leaves were folded, three sheets within another, making sixteen pages to a "book." At the top of the first page of each of these books was written: "A Day Book continued, Etc.," which will explain the regular recurrence of that expression throughout the following print. All these sixteen-page books are skilfully bound together with strong linen thread, natural color. The writing is remarkably well preserved and legible, considering its fineness.
